

Second, Bosnia-Herzegovina is a classic example of a divided society, namely a society divided along ethno-cultural lines and in which these cleavages are permanent markers of political mobilisation. Footnote 9 By focusing on Bosnia-Herzegovina, this study further explores the role of internal diversity in the process of degradation. Finally ...

The Tribunal made it clear that the delegation of the power of governance "within the pre-war Brcko Opstina" by the Entities was directly to the District government, i.e., that it was not a twostep process--a cession of power by each Entity to the government of Bosnia and Herzegovina and then another cession of power by the latter to the ...

Bosnia Herzegovina is an example of failed democratization. The Bosnian republic was an ethnically divided society. Muslims, Serbs, and Croats constituted three distinct ethnocultural communities whose relations over the centuries were characterized by both intergroup conflict and accommodation.

Introduction. It has long been argued that Bosnians are apathetic, apolitical and not capable of, or willing to, bring about political change. The international community has often accused Bosnians of being inert, emphasising how citizens could have a positive impact upon the local political process through the elections but have often failed to do so.

Bosnia and Herzegovina (BH) is located on the western part of the Balkan Peninsula. It has an area of 51 210 km² and a population of 3 972 000. According to the Dayton Agreement of November 1995, which ended the 1992-95 war, BH comprises two "entities" - the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina (FBH) and the Republic of Srpska (RS) - and the District of Brcko.

Between 1995 and 1999, the United Nations established transitional administrations over four war-torn territories - East Timor, Bosnia-Herzegovina, Eastern Slavonia, and Kosovo.

Bosnia-Herzegovina experienced a traumatic war that led to the death of over 100,000 citizens and the displacement of half the population. The Dayton Peace Accords have regulated post-war reconstruction and politics since 1995, resulting in a complex power-sharing system that relied heavily on extensive international intervention in the first post-war decade.
